

TRAPEZE

Greatness is not about leaving first base and running to second base. Certainly not at the emotional level, for sure! So to really feel the Greatest Version of You:

Climb a tower to the highest platform that you can stand... and go one more.

Take out the safety net.

Take out the burly catcher swinging on the other side, waiting to catch you.

And last, to understand and feel the emotions of Greatness, take out the trapeze over there, too. You must leave from this side, not having evidence that a trapeze awaits you there, but knowing and believing that your Greatness will create it by the time that you get there!

That is the Greatest Version of You!

Most believe crossing the abyss (facing their fears and taking the bite out of life anyway!) means that this will be their breakthrough! Fear and anxiety should go down, right? Sorry, you get NEW fears from a NEW place... which creates your NEXT breakthrough!
- Facebook, February 5, 2010

What did you think when you heard, “the greatest trapeze”?

What did you feel when you heard, “the greatest trapeze”?

When you felt the adrenaline, was it exhilaration and excitement – or intense fear and trepidation?

What does it mean in your life to leap for a trapeze that's not there?

Let's make the metaphor real: What in your life now is a distant trapeze, waiting for the Greatest Version of You to leap: is it with your spouse or significant other? A child? Something at work? Your health? It relates to your Purpose?? What trapeze is waiting for you that you have not leaped for because you never climbed the tower, the safety net was never good enough, or you never believed you had a strategy that would get you from here to there? What would you say, think, feel, or do to make the Greatest Leap? Be expansive! Be bold! Leap now as you write!

